

I Want My Converged IP…

Don MacVittie, 2010-30-09

Every once in a while you hear something going on in the political spectrum that strikes you as meaningful and useful, that you hope against hope they will manage to get past the details and partisanship and move forward on. Right about the time of the writing of this blog, in the United States, we're hearing a lot of these things because it's an election cycle. Problem is that with 300 million people it is rare that any one idea is agreed upon by everyone, and politicians cover the spectrum, so often what sounds like a good idea is tough to get pushed through, and election years tend to generate more ideas and less action than other years.
